

ABSTRACT

In a method of managing knowledge, existing knowledge is captured in a predetermined format of selected information categories, the captured knowledge is organized into an indexed database of information including links between related information, new knowledge is acquired and captured in the predetermined format, and the database is updated to include the new information and links between the new information and related information.